Some 60,000 members of the public were attracted to the campus on 20th and 21st November when the University held its triennial open day.

The two-day function was organized by the Organizing Committee of the 1993 CU Open Day with full support from the University's four constituent colleges.

After a traditional lion's dance, the official opening ceremony began at 3.00 p.m. on 20th November at the podium of the Science Centre. Officiating guests included Mr. David W. K. Sin, member of the University Council;

Prof. Charles K. Kao, vice-chancellor; Prof. S. W. Tam, pro-vice-chancellor; the Hon. Eric Li Ka-cheung, chairman of the Commission for Youth; Dr.

'93 Open Day

Deanna Lee Rudgard, executive secretary of the Lee Hysan Foundation; and Miss Ho Kit-man, chairlady of the Organizing Committee of the 1993 CU Open Day.

After an opening address by the vice-chancellor and a speech by the Hon. Eric Li, prizes for the Open Day Essay Competition and the 30th Anniversary Photography Competition were presented to winners by Mr. David Sin, and 30th Anniversary Scholarships were awarded to 14 outstanding students by Dr. Deanna Lee Rudgard.

Open day activities were largely centred around the University Mall, where departmental societies and interest groups put up exhibitions on various themes and performed interesting experiments for visitors. There were counters to sell books published by the University Press and other souvenir items. There were also public lectures, video shows, games, and food stalls to sell snacks like Japanese sushi.

Many buildings around the Mall and many student hostels were open to visitors. Groups of elderly people and secondary students were frequently seen touring these facilities with CU students as guides.

A highlight of the programme on the first day was a debate on whether exit and entry freedom of Hong Kong people should be given concrete assurance after 1997. The debate was conducted by Mr. T. L. Tsim, director of The Chinese University Press. Two teams each consisting of one academic staff, one student, and one guest speaker were formed to represent the proposition and the opposition. This year the guest speakers were Legislative Councillor Ms. Emily Lau and Mr. Tsang Yok Shing, chairman of the Democratic Alliance for Betterment of Hong Kong.

In the evening, a variety show was held at the Sir Run Run Shaw Hall by the organizing committee of the open day. Through different performances students expressed how they felt about studying and living on campus.

All in all, the open day was a successful attempt to let the public know more about the University and its students. The next open day will be held three years later in 1996.

New Language Learning Centre Opens on Campus

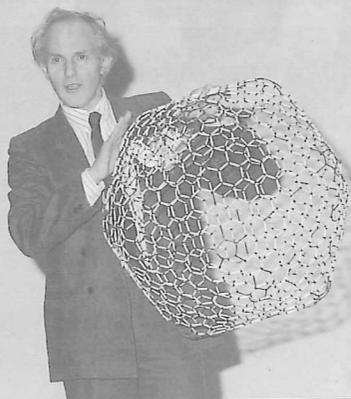

An Independent Learning Centre (ILC) was formally opened on 30th October to provide self-access language learning facilities for staff and students.

Located on the fourth floor of the Tin Ka Ping Building, ILC is equipped with a wide range of self-access materials including software teaching packages, audio and video tapes, laser discs, CD-ROM discs, language worksheets, and a selection of books, magazines, and newspapers. A satellite dish on the building makes foreign language television broadcasts available. The ILC also contains a Writing Centre which provides one-to-one tutorial services for undergraduates, postgraduates, and staff members who want to improve their writing skills.

The centre is open to the entire University community and is run by the English Language Teaching Unit. Its main goals are to encourage students to assume personal responsibility for their continued language learning and to enhance their language skills in a variety of ways. While set up primarily to meet the English language needs of CUHK, the ILC will likely be offering assistance for other language studies in the future.

Officiating at the opening ceremony were Prof. S. W. Tam, pro-vice-chancellor; Dr. H. H. Ho, dean of arts; Dr. Michelle Chase of the English Language Teaching Unit; and Mr. David Tang, founder of the Community English Language Laboratory.

The Celestial Sphere That Fell to Earth

A public lecture in commemoration of the University's 30th anniversary was presented by the Faculty of Science on 23rd November in the Shaw College Lecture Theatre. Prof. Harold Kroto, co-discoverer of C_{60} , was invited to deliver a talk on 'C₆₀ Buckminsterfullerene, the Celestial Sphere That Fell to Earth'.

Prof. Kroto, Royal Society Research Professor of the School of Chemistry and Molecular Sciences at the University of Sussex, UK, discovered C_{60} , the third allotropic form of carbon (after graphite and diamond), in 1985. It has been named Buckminsterfullerene because the molecular structure resembles the basic pattern of the geodesic domes devised by Buckminster Fuller. Composed of 60 carbon atoms and displaying an elegant symmetry in its structure, Buckminsterfullerene was 'Molecule of the Year 1991' and has inspired immense research interest among chemists, physicists, and materials scientists. According to Prof. Kroto, it has vast potentials for the synthesis of novel compounds and promises exciting applications.

Prof. Kroto believed it would take at least five more years for the properties of C_{60} to be fully understood, and pointed out that application research into C_{60} might help the development of high temperature superconductors and ferromagnets.

The Kwok Sports Building was formally opened on 15th November 1993 by Dr. J. S. Lee, life member of the University Council, Mr. C. F. Kwok, chairman of Kai Yue Cheong Limited, and Prof. Charles K. Kao, vice-chancellor of the University.

Located right next to the University Sports Centre, the new three-storey building houses six squash courts, the Department of Sports Science and Physical Education, sports science research laboratories, and a classroom.

The new sports facility has been named the Kwok Sports Building to record the generous donation of the Kwok's family to the University.

In his opening address, Prof. Kao said that the new building made possible a quicker pace of growth in the University's physical education programmes and sports science research.

Kwok Sports Building Formally Opened

The University will offer a new full-time undergraduate programme in sports science and physical education next year. The first degree programme of its kind in Hong Kong, it is designed to prepare students for future careers in sports coaching and sports management in primary, secondary and tertiary institutions as well as in the public sector.

International Conference on Moral and Civic Education

An international conference on moral and civic education was organized on campus from 19th to 22nd November by the University's Faculty of Education, in association with the Hong Kong Institute of Educational Research, the departments of educational administration and policy, psychology, and religion, and the Hong Kong Educational Research Association.

The event attracted over 100 participants from different disciplines and professions. Renowned scholars from mainland China, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Singapore, Israel, Canada, UK and USA delivered a total of 41 papers and discussed important issues in moral and civic education. They identified several areas on which future attention and efforts should be centred: ways to bridge the gap between theory and practice, comparative studies of ideals and concepts of moral and civic education in different cultural contexts, and the complex relationship among moral education, civic education, environmental education, peace education and human rights education in a new era of global cooperation.

Staff Association 1993 AGM

The Staff Association of The Chinese University of Hong Kong held its annual general meeting at the Shatin Hsin Kuang Restaurant on 26th November 1993. The function was followed by a dinner party, Karaoke and a lucky draw, and was attended by some 300 members and guests.

The meeting approved AGM minutes of 1992 and the president's and honorary treasurer's reports. It also approved the appointment of the association's auditor and legal advisers for 1994.

THE CHINESE UNIVERSITY by ANY OTHER NAME Would FARE AS WELL ?

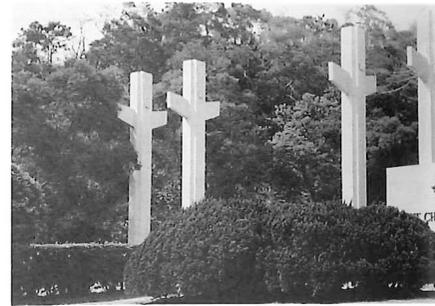

On 2nd July 1963, Mr. E. B. Teesdale, the Colonial Secretary, wrote to inform the Hon. C. Y. Kwan., chairman of the Provisional Council of this university, that 'on the advice of [the Executive] Council, the Governor has decided that the name [of the new university] shall be The Chinese University of Hong Kong.'

This name was, in fact, chosen by the Provisional Council for government endorsement. What other alternatives had been considered? Why was 'The Chinese University of Hong Kong' the best choice?

At a time when several local institutions of higher learning are searching for new names to reflect their new university status, let us look at some of the suggestions put forward to founders of this university for consideration 30 years ago, and why they were not adopted.

Absence of Specific Guidelines

The first Fulton Commission which recommended the establishment of a new Chinese university did not go into the naming of the university at all. When the government finally announced its plans for the university in early 1963, therefore, a host of possible names were suggested by various parties and much discussion was generated in the local press about the best name to use. Some suggestions were inspired by geographical considerations; some were linked with the names of distinguished persons; others tried to reflect the new university's objectives, constitution, or cultural heritage.

Geographical Names

Kowloon University (九龍大學)

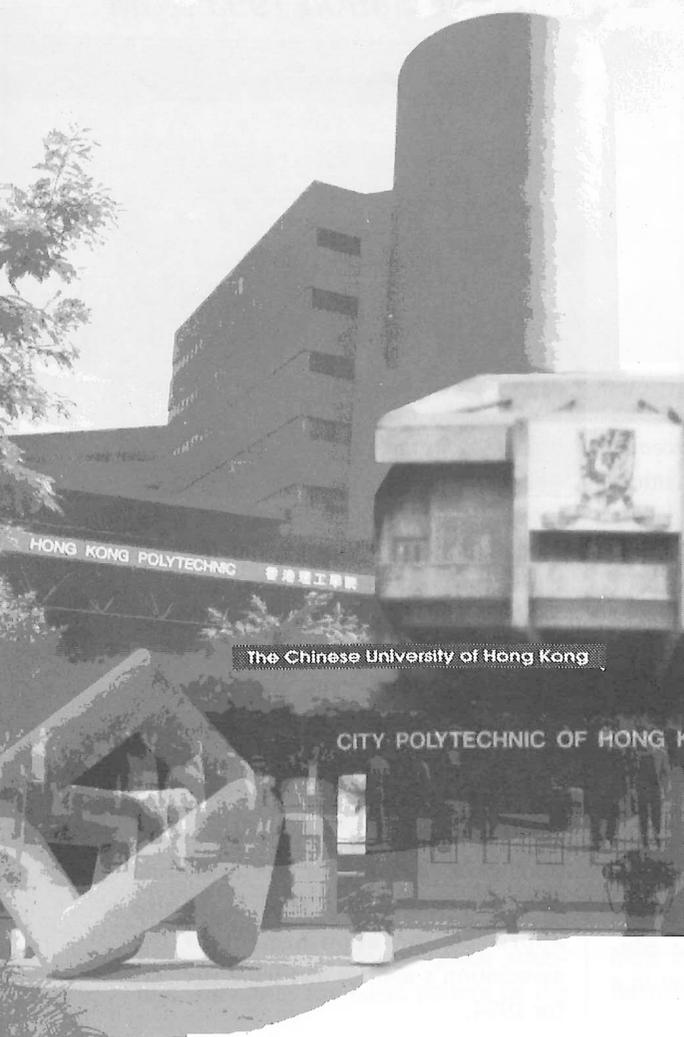

The principal objection to this name was that while the university's administrative headquarters would be temporarily accommodated in offices in Kowloon, its permanent campus was to be found in the New Territories.

Shatin University (沙田大學)

The name in Chinese might suggest that the University was built on sand. The name in English was frequently mispronounced by foreigners.

Nan Hai University (南海大學)

The District of Nan Hai (南海郡), which included the present-day Guangdong Province and the region where Hong Kong now stands, was set up by Qin shi Huang di (秦始皇帝), the first emperor to unify China in 221 BC. This name was considered unsuitable because

- (1) it is very similar to 'Nan Yang University' (南洋大學) in Singapore and 'Nan Fang University' (南方大學) in Guangzhou, and will easily cause confusion;
- (2) Qin shi Huang di was notorious for burning the Chinese classics;
- (3) Nan Hai has for a long time been the name of a particular county in Guangdong Province, a county that has absolutely no relevance to the new university.

New Territories University (新界大學)

This name associates the university far too exclusively with the New Territories.

Beacon Hill University

Beacon Hill overlooks Hung Mui Kuk (紅梅谷), the site originally proposed for the new university. But its official name in Chinese (筆架山) carries no meaning of 'guidance' or 'inspiration' as its English counterpart does, and is inappropriate as the name of a university.

Hin King University (顯徑大學)

The name 'Hin King' was derived from the names of two villages — Hin Tin (顯田) and Sheung King Hou (上徑口) — both found near the Hung Mui Kuk campus site. Since a better site at Ma Liu Shui was later granted to the University, and since in Mandarin the suggested name is pronounced in the same manner as '險徑' (meaning a dangerous and difficult path), the suggestion had to be dropped.

'Personal' Names

Clementi University (金文泰大學)

Sir Cecil Clementi, Governor of Hong Kong from 1925 to 1930, was a sinologue known for his concern for educational developments in the territory. However, a well-known secondary school on Hong Kong Island had already been named after him and to use his name again for the University might imply an association between the two.

Royal Names

The use of the names of leading members of the Royal Family was open to two major objections: (1) There had been no precedent in the Chinese education tradition for a high seat of learning to be so named. (2) Royal names when rendered into Chinese tend to be meaningless, and can be pronounced very differently in different Chinese dialects. Some such pronunciations might depart far from the English original.

Names to Reflect Cultural Heritage, Educational Goals, or Constitution

Tung Wen University (同文大學)

'Tung Wen' (同文) refers to the unification of the forms of Chinese characters. This name was not favoured because it did not signify the interflow of cultures and would evoke an undesirable association with 'Tung Wen Shu Yuan' (同文書院), a school operated by the Japanese in Shanghai in the early 20th century.

Ming Tak University (明德大學)

'Ming Tak' (明德) means to 'illustrate illustrious virtue' and is taken from the Book of the Great Learning (《大學》), an important work in the Chinese classics.

The same two characters however form part of the motto of the University of Hong Kong (明德格物), and it would be rather odd to use them as the name of the new university.

San Yi University (三一大學)

'San Yi' means 'three in one' — three (san) constituent colleges in one (yi) university. But to those not familiar with the history of the University, the same words may mean the Holy Trinity or a date that is particularly memorable (like June 4).

Chung Wah University (中華大學)

The literal meaning of this name is 'the university of China', which is not entirely appropriate for a university established in Hong Kong, a British colony.

The Federal Chinese University of Hong Kong (香港聯合中文大學) or Hong Kong Chinese Federal University (香港華聯大學)

The Chinese Colleges Joint Council (an organization with representatives from the three original colleges) had early on indicated its objection to the inclusion of the word 'federal' in either the Chinese or English name of the new university. They pointed out that other federal-type universities such as London University or the University of Toronto were not saddled with such an appendage in their names. To respect the Joint Council's feelings, the Provisional Council adopted neither of these proposals, noting that the first one was particularly unsuitable, as its Chinese version might imply that the new university was primarily an enlarged United College.

What's in Its Name?

The Provisional Council's final choice was 'The Chinese University of Hong Kong', which they believed could best convey the institution's Hong Kong connection and its cultural heritage.

The late Dr. Choh-Ming Li, founding vice-chancellor, had this to say about the name of the University in the first Vice-Chancellor's Report:

'The name of The Chinese University, in Chinese, may mean the use of Chinese as the principal language of instruction. It may also mean a university with a firm background in Chinese culture. Being the only Chinese institution of higher learning in the community and one of the few major universities in the free world in which Chinese is a principal medium of instruction and research, the University has a unique mission to fulfil.'

And he made clear in his speech at the 19th congregation in October 1978 what this 'mission' is:

'... what is unique is that we have dedicated ourselves to a special mission, namely, the introduction and development of Chinese data into each and every one of the academic disciplines.

'In a nutshell, The Chinese University of Hong Kong is the University that seeks to include a Chinese dimension in all academic disciplines.'

Whether or not members of the Provisional Council had the same ideas and expectations in mind when they chose the University's name is uncertain. What is certain is that after 15 years of service the University's first vice-chancellor found their choice most 'proper and appropriate'. ○ doubt as to whether such gifts are permissible under the law should first consult the Prevention of Bribery Ordinance.

Copies of the ordinance are available for reference at the University Library and its branch libraries, as well as the Information and Public Relations Office (2nd floor, University Administration Building).
