CONTRIBUTIONS FROM THE ASIA FOUNDATION

The Chinese University of Hong Kong has, since its establishment, received substantial assistance from private and public sources, both local and overseas, which supplement Hong Kong Government grants and assist in its physical and academic development.

The Asia Foundation, which has played a unique role in the University's development with strategic and timely grants, is one of these donors. Throughout the years, its representatives, have consistently worked closely with the University and helped it grow.

Fittingly, The Asia Foundation played an important role when funds were sought for the first building on the University's new Shatin campus. It was the Foundation which provided the necessary matching funds from the private sector to enable The Chinese University to qualify for a United States Government grant for the construction of the Benjamin Franklin Centre.

The Asia Foundation has been especially responsive to innovative projects geared to local needs.
It has been instrumental in enabling the University to develop new courses of study to meet these needs, both prevalent and anticipated. A notable example is the establishment of a Department of Journalism and a Mass Communications Centre, the first degree-granting course of its kind ever established in Hong Kong.

Generous grants from The Asia Foundation have made it possible for the University to initiate various research projects:

1. Translation/Publication Project designed to introduce modern Western thought to the Chinese reading community through the publication of readers in the social sciences and humanities;
2. Centre for Translation Projects set up to promote bilingualism in anticipation of the growing need for translators in the wake of the wider use of the Chinese language in government and non-government organizations;
3. Experiments in Computer Translation from Chinese to English and vice versa which, when completed, may be expected to facilitate greatly East-West cultural exchange.

The Social Research Centre has benefited from Asia Foundation grants in action-oriented research projects, including a study of Kwun-Tong (one of the major satellite towns), to facilitate town planning, and a population study in cooperation with the Hong Kong Family Planning Association.

The Foundation has also been a source of support for faculty research, some of which has led to the establishment of permanent institutes. The Marine Science Laboratory stands on the shore of Tolo Harbour today as a testimony of how The Asia Foundation's relatively small research grant led to a much larger Government allocation through the University and Polytechnic Grants Committee.

With its wide range of interests, the Foundation has also helped the University to sponsor seminars on local issues, including a Symposium on the Teaching of Chinese Language and Literature in Hong Kong Schools and the Pre-employment Workshop. The Foundation has also made a grant to finance a special study of and a seminar on The Dream of the Red Chamber. The organized "Red-ologist" research has resulted in several monographs and a new critique, the latter published in conjunction with the University of Paris.

Staff Development Programme

The Chinese University has been represented at many regional and international academic and professional conferences through the assistance of The Asia Foundation. Its grants have enabled the University to stretch considerably its own budget for conference participation.

The Foundation has also helped the University in its programme for staff development. Its grants enable the University to send administrative staff members to attend short-term training courses and seminars to undertake study tours. In some cases, the Foundation's assistance is in the form of services—helping observers by arranging their itineraries and their meetings with counterparts overseas.

Library System

The entire University library system has benefited from gifts from The Asia Foundation. Long before the University was established, the Foundation enriched the libraries of the struggling post-secondary Colleges, which eventually became the constituent Colleges of the University, with generous donations of textbooks and reference works from its "Books for Asian Students Program" in San Francisco. These were further supplemented with local purchases, including some rare thread-bound Chinese classics. The book gifts are being continued today.

It was The Asia Foundation who, in response to a University request, helped to implement the adoption of the Library of Congress catalogue system in the University. A Library of Congress catalogue specialist was invited to visit Hong Kong to conduct a special training course for library staff of this University and other local institutes, with special emphasis on Chinese publications. A special Foundation grant made it possible for the University library system to undertake a crash programme to re-catalogue its holdings.

International Liaison

Another important contribution which The Asia Foundation has made to the University is its role as a catalyst. In a number of cases, the Foundation's contribution was not monetary but in the form of meeting the University's needs by calling on its vast resources in institutional relations in the United States and Asia, and, to a lesser degree, in Europe and the Pacific regions.

The structure of The Asia Foundation, with resident representatives in Asia, makes it a unique organization. It is closer to Asia since its representatives are on the Asian scene and working with Asian institutions and individuals. The Chinese University has always found The Asia Foundation representatives sympathetic, responsive, cooperative, and prompt in giving assistance at the right time to projects which are within the Foundation's field of interest. The Chinese University wishes to acknowledge the valuable assistance which it has received from the Foundation in these formative years. The Asia Foundation is truly a great and good, old friend.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS AT BENJAMIN FRANKLIN CENTRE

Additional Facilities

The Benjamin Franklin Centre accommodates the two University servicing units that are closely related to the students: the Student Affairs Section of the University Registry and the Appointments Service. The University Student Union Office is also housed there. Its other services include a cafeteria, dining rooms, a bank and a lounge. A book shop, a barber shop, and a beauty parlour came into operation in 1975.

Being a centre for staff-student amenities, it provides facilities that cater to all tastes. Apart from the Music Appreciation Room already in existence, a Chess Room, a Ladies' Common Room and two committee rooms have recently been opened to serve the whole University community. University members may also arrange to hold exhibitions of works of art or other subjects of interest at the entrance hall of the Centre, which can also serve exhibition purposes.

The swimming pool outside the Benjamin Franklin Centre has been completed and is scheduled to be opened soon. This Olympic-size pool is 50 metres by 18 metres, its depth varying from 4 feet to 15 feet, and is equipped with 1-metre and 3-metre diving boards and a 5-metre/10-metre diving platform.

Building Programme

The most significant of The Asia Foundation’s contributions was made even before the University was established. As long ago as the 1950’s, the Foundation saw the need for a second institution of higher learning in Hong Kong. It made vital grants to Chung Chi, New Asia and United Colleges, which today are the Foundation Colleges of The Chinese University.

When the Hong Kong Government accepted the Fulton Report and decided to establish The Chinese University of Hong Kong, it was the San Francisco-based Asia Foundation which helped the Hong Kong authorities arrange with the University of California at Berkeley to grant a leave of absence to a professor chosen to become the first Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Choh-Ming Li.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM THE ASIA FOUNDATION

The Chinese University of Hong Kong has, since its establishment, received substantial assistance from private and public sources, both local and overseas, which supplement Hong Kong Government grants and assist in its physical and academic development.

The Asia Foundation, which has played a unique role in the University’s development with strategic and timely grants, is one of these donors. Throughout the years, its representatives, have consistently worked closely with the University and helped it grow.

Academic and Research Programme

The Asia Foundation has been especially responsive to innovative projects geared to local needs.
