The University to Receive $22 Million from the UPGC for 44 Research Projects

For the second year in succession, the University outdid other tertiary institutions in the competitive bid for research grants from the University and Polytechnic Grants Committee (UPGC).

For 1991-92, the Government has made available HK$63 million for deserving research proposals submitted by the academic and research personnel in six local tertiary institutions and selected by the UPGC's Research Council for support. Selection is based on the competitive merits of the various proposals and their relevance to the Hong Kong setting.

This year, of the 135 research proposals selected by the Research Council of the UPGC, 44 (32.6 per cent) are CUHK projects. This is also the highest score among the six local tertiary institutions. These 44 projects will receive earmarked grants totalling $22,239,000, representing 35.4 per cent of the Government’s $63 million budget for 1991-92. The University is way ahead of other institutions in this year’s allocation of research resources.

The University’s successful research proposals fall into eight different areas: arts and language (2); administrative, business and social studies (6); biological sciences (9); physical sciences and engineering (4); education (1); medicine (15); electrical and electronic engineering (2); and computer science, information technology and mathematics (5).

Here is a summary of the results of the UPGC deliberations of bids submitted by UPGC-funded tertiary institutions:

To coordinate all applications from staff members for UPGC research grants, the University has set up a Research Committee, which is supported by seven subject panels, each responsible for screening and evaluating research proposals in a particular subject area. Since 1988, the Research Committee has handled over 400 research proposals, and the number of projects that have successfully obtained earmarked grants from the UPGC has increased from 12 in 1988, 18 in 1989, 25 in 1990, to 44 in 1991.

The Research Committee has also announced that applications for UPGC research grants for 1992-93 are now being invited. Details and application forms are obtainable from departmental offices and various research units.
Memorial Service for Dr. Choh-Ming Li

Some 300 people gathered in the Sir Run Run Shaw Hall on Saturday, 11th May 1991 to pay their last respects to the founding vice-chancellor of The Chinese University: Dr. Choh-Ming Li.

Dr. Li passed away on 21st April in Berkeley, California. He was 79.

Mrs. Sylvia Li, widow of Dr. Li, made a special trip from the States to attend the memorial service. She was accompanied by her eldest son, Mr. Winston Li, and other family members.

Sir David Wilson, chancellor of the University, was on an overseas trip and sent his aide-de-camp to convey his condolences to Mrs. Li on his behalf.

The service formally began at 3.00 p.m. with an organ prelude 'Requiem'. Mr. Thomas H. C. Cheung and Mr. K. Ma represented the Federation of Alumni Associations of the University and the Student Union to present wreaths. Eulogies were then delivered by Sir Yuet-Keung Kan, pro-chancellor of the University; Sir Quo-wei Lee, chairman of the University Council; and Prof. Charles K. Kao, vice-chancellor of the University. Prof. Ambrose Y. C. King, pro-vice-chancellor, gave a detailed account of Dr. Li's life and work, praising his monumental contributions to the University.

A choir made up of over 30 students and alumni of the University sang two anthems and a soprano solo rendition of ‘Requiem: Pie Jesu’ was given by Miss Clara Yip, an alumnus of the University. Mr. Winston Li then represented the bereaved family to give a vote of thanks and talked about Dr. Li’s role as a father and a family man. The function ended at around 4.15 p.m. with an organ postlude, 'Messe Grégorienne'.

The full text of the eulogies delivered in the memorial service will be published in the forthcoming issue of the Chinese University Bulletin.
A symposium and exhibition on 'Learning for the Future' was held from 24th to 26th May at the Hong Kong Science Museum for those interested in pursuing postgraduate studies in Hong Kong.

Jointly presented by The Chinese University, the University of Hong Kong, City Polytechnic of Hong Kong, Hong Kong Baptist College, Hong Kong Polytechnic, and the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology, the function included a series of forums and counselling sessions organized by each of the six institutions.

The symposium began on the afternoon of 24th May when heads of the six tertiary institutions met to exchange views on the future of postgraduate education in Hong Kong. Two more public forums were held on the following two days. One focused on the job prospects for graduates with higher degrees, and the other was entitled 'Postgraduate Study Opportunities in Hong Kong'. In the latter, high-level representatives of the six tertiary institutions gathered to identify characteristics of the postgraduate programmes offered in each of the institutions, and to discuss their perceptions of Hong Kong's need for expansion of postgraduate places. Prof. S. W. Tam, pro-vice-chancellor of the University and dean of the graduate school, also gave a public lecture to introduce the curriculum structure of the graduate school in The Chinese University of Hong Kong.

Yet Another Victory for CUHK Debaters

The University's Cantonese debating team achieved its second victory in three months in an intervarsity debating contest held between The Chinese University and the University of East Asia on 18th May 1991 at Sintra Square, Macau. Arguing against the motion 'The media should not encourage senseless culture', the CUHK team won by a margin of two to one after an hour of heated debate. Mr. Cheng Kong-chung on the CUHK team was also selected best speaker in the contest.

The intervarsity debating contest is an annual event organized by the two universities to encourage cultural exchange between students and to cultivate their interest in debating activities.

New Computer Equipment Donated by Sun Microsystems

The University recently received some HK$1,000,000 worth of new computer equipment from Sun Microsystems.

The donation comprises one SPARC server 330, three SPARCstation 1+ workstations and two SPARCstation SLC workstations, all manufactured by the Sun Microsystems plant in Mountain View, California. The equipment has been installed at the Open Systems Laboratory in the Department of Computer Science, and is now part of the Chinese University Engineering Computer Network, which can be accessed by workstations and personal computers anywhere in Hong Kong using the UNIX operating system. This donation will be used to study UNIX-based distributed computing environments and related problems.

A ceremony to mark the generous donation from Sun Microsystems and the opening of the Open Systems Laboratory was held on 13th May at the Department of Computer Science.
New Course on Foreign Exchange Practices

The BBA Degree Programme of the Faculty of Business Administration will introduce a new course entitled 'Foreign Exchange Practices' in the 1991-92 academic year. Designed by the business faculty in conjunction with government officials and leading experts of foreign exchange in the private sector, the course is the first of its kind to be introduced in the territory. The main objective is to familiarize fourth-year students concentrating in business administration with the knowledge and techniques of foreign exchange operations, with a special emphasis on the Hong Kong situation.

Those who teach the course have all been involved in course design. They include academics from the Faculty of Business Administration as well as directors, chief executives and managers of local banks and financial companies. Prof. Mun Kin-chok, dean of the Faculty of Business Administration, is the course coordinator.

Course contents include theory of monetary management of the banks in Western countries; the Hong Kong monetary framework; the Hong Kong dollar interbank and paper market; corporate dealing; treasury risk management; financial management; money market; the exchange rate system and the foreign exchange market; exchange rate determination and forecasting; the spot market and the forward market; and trading games.

Symposium on Communication and Societal Development

The Department of Journalism and Communication hosted a symposium on 'Communication and Societal Development' from 29th April to 1st May to celebrate its 25th anniversary.

The three-day symposium held at the Sir Cho Yiu Hall provided an opportunity for Chinese communication scholars from Hong Kong, mainland China, Taiwan, Singapore, Japan and the United States to exchange views and findings about journalism and communication issues. The main themes of the symposium were communication theories and development; media in changing societies; the relationship between the media and economic, cultural and political development; as well as communication education and research. Emphasis was laid on the role of the mass media in the development of three Chinese societies: Hong Kong, mainland China and Taiwan. A total of 27 papers were presented and the proceedings of the symposium will be published by the Department of Journalism and Communication in due course.

Workshop on Recent Advances in Gynaecological Surgery

A workshop to introduce recent advances in gynaecological surgery was organized by the Department of Obstetrics and Gynaecology on 2nd May at the Prince of Wales Hospital.

The workshop featured lectures and demonstrations on LEEP (loop electrosurgical excision procedure) and endometrial ablation, and was attended by both local and overseas experts in the field.

LEEP is a newly-developed method of treating premalignant cervix conditions. Cervical pathologies are precursors of cervical cancer, which may be prevented if premalignant conditions of the cervix are treated successfully. Prof. D. Townsend, a pioneer in LEEP from the University of California, demonstrated to the participants how the LEEP operation could be performed in the outpatient department and be very effective in expert hands.

Endometrial ablation is a new treatment for excessive menstrual periods. Women suffering from such disorders usually require drug treatment, and if that fails, hysterectomy. Endometrial ablation may, however, be performed under local anaesthesia, and no abdominal incision is required when the inner lining of the womb is removed by the surgeon.

The Department of Obstetrics and Gynaecology will continue to conduct and promote research on gynaecological surgery to improve patient care.
The Hong Kong Family in the Nineties – Contradictions and Outlook

The Gender Research Programme of the Hong Kong Institute of Asia-Pacific Studies organized a forum entitled 'The Hong Kong Family in the Nineties – Contradictions and Outlook' on 25th May to investigate the various problems faced by Hong Kong families in the nineties and the solutions to such problems. Participants focused their discussion on the concept of the family as defined by social welfare policy-makers, academic researchers, as well as front-line social workers. They also explored the allocation of family duties including parental responsibilities and care for the elderly and the sick in the family.

The Gender Research Programme was established several years ago to support and coordinate research on gender issues and to promote exchange among interested parties in the field.

Make the Most of Your Post

To contact a colleague or friend on campus, a simple phone call will suffice. Even written messages and complex data pose no problem, for there is always the fax machine. But what if you want to send an official document that may need to be signed, or memos that have to be circulated round different parties?

In such cases, you can make use of the University's internal mail service, which is efficiently run by a team of regular University staff. Those who are familiar with the system can use it to send documents to their colleagues in the shortest possible time. Unfamiliarity may breed delay, but you can rest assured that the documents will eventually reach their destinations safe and sound. Of course, if the document is vitally urgent, you should always use the service of a messenger.

A Miniature of the Government System

The internal mail system on the campus resembles a miniature Government system, with a 'General Post Office' at the centre of a network of branches and sub-branches spread throughout the campus. The Mail Room, which is located on the ground floor of the John Fulton Centre, serves as the nerve centre, coordinating all incoming and outgoing mail. Branches and sub-branches are located in various districts and units according to geographical conditions and local needs. While each of the four colleges naturally has its own 'post office', the University Health Service, the Department of Extramural Studies, the Marine Science Laboratory, and the Fong Shu Chuen Building have also been designated as special dispatch/collection points, owing to their relatively 'remote' locations.

How the System Works

Mailing within the Same District

Every day at regular intervals, an office assistant collects all the outgoing mail from the office and takes it to the district 'post office' for handling. All such 'post offices' contain a series of pigeon holes, each of which is labelled with the name of a department or office in the same district. The office assistant then distributes the outgoing mail to the appropriate boxes, collects any incoming mail which might have been posted into his office's pigeon hole, and then returns directly to his office to distribute the mail.

This is a fast, direct method of distributing mail within the same district on campus. All that is needed for a letter to reach its destination is one simple exchange at the district 'post office'.

Mailing between Different Districts

Sending letters to another district, however, is not so straightforward. District 'post offices' have to sort the letters according to their destinations and place them in separate post bags bound for specific districts. All such post bags are then taken to the 'General Post Office' in the John Fulton Centre for distribution to various district 'post offices'.

Since the campus is so large, the post bags are transported by a small van, which makes daily trips to and from various collection/dispatch points for all incoming and outgoing mail. The Faculty of Medicine is an exception in that it has its own post van, which makes daily trips between the Prince of Wales Hospital and the Choh-Ming Li Building for the Basic Medical Sciences.

Ensuring a Speedy Delivery

As with any system governed by the usual constraints of manpower and other resources, it is necessary to use it with maximum efficiency to ensure optimum results. This entails knowing the exact times of collection of outgoing mail from the office in order that letters can be prepared in advance, as well as knowing the schedule of the post van, in order to catch its earliest visit.

The Post Van Always Calls Twice

The post van leaves the 'General Post Office' in the John Fulton Centre six times a day and follows different routes each time, depositing and collecting letters at various district 'post offices' on the way. In theory, the post van will visit each station twice on a weekday and once on Saturdays. The post van route covers practically all major districts on the campus:

9.00 a.m.
Mail Room ⇒ Chung Chi College (collection) ⇒ Fong Shu Chuen Building (collection) ⇒ Mail Room

10.20 a.m.
Mail Room ⇒ Shaw College (collection & dispatch) ⇒ United College (collection & dispatch) ⇒ New Asia College (collection & dispatch) ⇒ United College (dispatch) ⇒ University Health Service (collection & dispatch) ⇒ Mail Room

2.50 p.m.

10.20 a.m.
Mail Room ⇒ Fong Shu Chuen Building (dispatch) ⇒ Chung Chi College (dispatch) ⇒ Lek Yuen Health Centre (collection & dispatch) ⇒ EMSD (collection & dispatch) ⇒ Mail Room

10.50 a.m.

2.50 p.m.

How Long Does It Take?

For a letter to reach its destination in the shortest possible time, each link in the chain must be complete. If any part of the cycle comprising outgoing mail collection, sorting, incoming mail collection, and final distribution, is missed, or delayed, it can lead to delays of up to 24 hours—a not uncommon occurrence.

The following two examples demonstrate the ideal situation for intra and inter district mailing on campus:

Intra District Mailing

- Sender: Mr A from Department X, Fung King Hey Building
- Recipient: Mr B from Department Y, Pi-Chiu Building
- Time needed: 30 minutes minimum

Inter District Mailing

- Sender: Miss C from Block P, United College
- Recipient: Miss D from Block Q, Chung Chi College
- Time needed: 120 minutes minimum
Dead Letters

Whose Letter Is This?

A letter 'dies' when the name or address on the envelope is incomplete, or illegible, or similarly when the recipient of the letter has left the University without leaving a forwarding address. Another cause is when letters are sent out in University envelopes, but with no proper return address. If the Government Post Office is unable to deliver them to the correct address for any reason, they are returned to the University Mail Room, which then has the unenviable task of trying to identify the original sender on campus. Handling these 'dead' or otherwise undeliverable letters is just part of the daily routine of the campus post team. Mr. Yu Wan Sing of the University Mail Room says that the University receives hundreds of these 'dead' letters every day, mostly from off-campus senders.

Reviving 'Dead' Letters

To deliver letters with addresses but no specific address, staff in the Mail Room have to search their memories for the whereabouts of the recipient, and if that fails, the staff list is searched and the help of the Personnel Section may be enlisted. If both of these attempts fail, the letters will be posted on the bulletin board of the Mail Room for a period. If no one claims them, they will be returned to the Government Post Office.

It is not often that on-campus letters 'die', but occasionally this does happen, and when it does, the 'dead' letters will be taken to the Business Section, where they will be opened in the presence of responsible staff to determine to whom they should be sent or returned.

A Mobile Post Office

Every weekday at around 2.50 p.m., a government post van parks next to the University Library. For the next hour and a half it is open for service to members of the University. At 4.20 p.m., the van leaves the campus, carrying with it post bags full of mail for the outside world.

For the last 20 years, the University has been engaged in a struggle to win approval for the establishment of a Government Post Office on the campus. What has been procured so far, however, is only a 'mobile post office', which was first introduced to the campus 13 years ago. The story is a long one.

When the major administrative units first moved to the Sha Tin campus from Mongkok in the early seventies, a request was already lodged with the Government for a post office to be set up at the University. The Government Post Office was however not convinced that the population of the campus area was large enough to justify the cost of maintaining a branch office.

Undaunted, the University persisted with its request and more letters of appeal were sent to the authorities. After much negotiation, the Government finally agreed, not to the establishment of a post office, but to the dispatch of a post van to the University to serve its members. The van made its first visit to the campus on 3rd July 1978.

As the post van had to serve a wide area including Sai Kung and Tai Po, it could only call at the University on Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoons, for half an hour each time. Despite such limitations, the van relieved much of the demand for a real post office on the campus, since its services were not confined to selling stamps and collecting letters. Aerogrammes, registered letters, parcels and UK post remittances could all be taken care of.

It was not long however before the University outgrew this embryonic service, and another request for a branch office was soon on its way to the Government Post Office, only to be turned down a second time. This time, though, the Government allowed one small concession - from 1982 on the van could call at the University five times a week instead of three, and for 90 minutes each time instead of 30.

Six years later, in 1988, the John Fulton Centre was completed, and a third request was lodged with the Government for the establishment of a post office inside the new amenities centre. A third rejection followed. According to the authorities, the space proposed by the University for the project - 150 square feet - fell far short of the government norm of 1,000 square feet, and besides, there was still the problem of the small university population...

The story ends, but the fight continues, and will continue until the battle is won.
Third Administrative Staff Luncheon

The third administrative staff luncheon was held on 21st May with Dr. Leung Yee, director of the Centre for Environmental Studies, and Dr. Lam Kin Che, member of the executive committee of the centre, as guest speakers. Dr. Leung talked about the origin, aims, and organization of the Centre for Environmental Studies while Dr. Lam briefly explained to the participants the environmental laws in Hong Kong and discussed how the University should react to such laws. Close to 30 administrators from various units attended the function.

Exercise and Your Health

The Physical Education Unit and the University Health Service jointly organized an outdoor event, 'Exercise and Your Health', on 4th May at the University Sports Centre. Over 40 staff members and their families attended the function. Activities included a health talk and relevant demonstrations, and the testing of fitness levels such as cardiovascular efficiency and muscle tone. All were enthusiastically received by the participants.

Exhibition of Duan Inkstones

The Art Gallery and the Guangdong Provincial Museum will jointly present an exhibition, 'The Quintessential Purple Stone: Duan Inkstones through the Ages', at the west wing of the Art Gallery from 29th June to 8th September. Exhibits will include some 120 pieces of Duan inkstones from the Tang to the Qing dynasties collected by the Guangdong Provincial Museum, and other pieces from public and private collections in Guangdong and Hong Kong.

Duan inkstones are made from the Duan stone, which is well-known for its fine, smooth and compact qualities. The Duan inkstone has long been treasured by the Chinese literati because it produces ink easily, without causing any damage to the brush. Extant Duan inkstones of the Tang to the Yuan dynasties are extremely rare. The seven pieces of pre-Ming inkstones in the exhibition came from archaeological excavations. Together, they demonstrate the common winnowing basket and chaoshou forms, as well as other simple and elegant shapes and decorations of the early inkstones. About 100 items in the exhibition are of the Ming and Qing periods. They show a great variety of natural markings, forms and carved decorations. Quite a number of them also carry literary inscriptions, a common characteristic of all objects for the scholar's studio.

The opening ceremony of the exhibition will be held at 4.30 p.m. on Friday, 28th June at the Art Gallery. Prof. Jao Tsung-i, honorary professor of fine arts, will officiate at the function. All are welcome.
